“fearless dancers and acute observers of human behaviour ★★★★★” Sanjoy Roy, The Guardian

“the savvy, Manchester-based duo are building a reputation for dance performances that are diverting and thought-provoking”
Donald Hutera, The Times

Company Chameleon brings stories and archetypes to life through dance.

The company was formed in 2007 out of the collective vision of Anthony Missen and Kevin Edward Turner, dance artists whose thread of collaboration began some fifteen years previously, at Trafford Youth Dance Theatre. They both received formal dance training at the Northern School of Contemporary Dance, and went on to work collectively and independently with some of the most innovative and exciting British and International Dance and Dance Theatre companies and choreographers.

In coming together as Company Chameleon, the duo has developed an artistic exchange which draws on their individual and collective experience to tackle human and personal issues through dance.

“explosive economy and a breathtaking power and conviction”

★★★★ Donald Hutera, The Times

Following the international success of Chameleon's first outdoor commission in 2009 Search and Find, the second part of the company's outdoor performance trilogy finds Missen and Turner taking their movement conversation into the realm of touch and its physical and emotional resonance.

Athletic yet sensitive, this powerful and engaging duet looks at the different stances we take as we relate to one another, and how the complex nature of our psychology means at times we push to exert our dominance and control, and at others submit and yield.
